

Vancouver Island West Coast – Sep 22

This morning the rain tickled our tin roof. Perhaps it was more just the drops off the trees. Nevertheless we decided to head out towards Tofino.

We stopped at Long Beach and had a walk on the sand. It was a little cool.

On the way to Tofino we stopped at the Tofitian Cafe and enjoyed coffee, an almond croissant (J), and a chocolate croissant (D). Then we walked next door to the Tofino Chocolate company and sampled a couple of their treats. They were good.

In Tofino we strolled through the Farmers' Market then had a walk around town in the sunshine.

Heading back to the campground, we stopped at the "new-to-us" Wickaninish Inn, now just south of Tofino. Pretty bloody impressive!

The picture below was taken from a 2-person balcony just outside the restaurant area – what a neat idea!

Back at camp, we tackled a walk to the beach from a different access point in the campground. What a difference a bit of sunshine makes!

On the beach, closer to the high tide line, vegetation struggles to get a foot hold.

Tomorrow is our last day here. Jen wants to tackle the Wild Pacific Trail in Ucluelet.

See you there!